Stanford Defense Helps Cardinal to Early Victories

By Jim Daves

No offense to the Cardinal but, when you think Stanford football, images of defensive players don't come quickly to mind.

Check out the back cover of this year's Stanford media guide and just above the moniker of "Championship Tradition" are photos of John Elway, Jim Plunkett, Troy Walters and Darrin Nelson.

For those not educated on the great grid-iron heroes from Palo Alto, Elway was a two-time All-American while passing for 9,349 yards during his career. Plunkett won the Heisman Trophy in 1970. Walters was voted the 1999 Biletnikoff Award winner as the nation's top receiver and Nelson belongs to the rare club of four-time All-Pac-10 honorees.

Thanks in part to some great play on special teams and defense, yes, defense, the Cardinal are 2-0 for just the fifth time in the program's last 31 seasons.

Leading the nation this week in rushing defense is Stanford. In victories against San Jose State (31-10) and BYU (18-14), the Cardinal have given up a grand total of not one, not two, not three, but yes, four rushing yards. In comparison, Ohio State is second, allowing 24 rushing yards per game.

Last week Stanford defenders held BYU to minus-five rushing yards, the fourth lowest total in Cardinal history. For good measure, the Stanford defense recorded five sacks, forced three Cougar fumbles and picked off a pair of passes.

It was not as if the pass-happy Cougars did not attempt to rush the ball. They finished the game with 25 carries. In Stanford's season-opener, San Jose State managed nine yards on 16 carries.

While the Cardinal defense has been successful in stuffing the run, the passing game has been a different story. San Jose State and BYU managed to throw for a combined 571 yards. Stanford ranks 106th of 117 teams in passing defense.

Washington, which has worked hard in its last two victories to establish a rushing attack, may have to return to the air this week to get the job done. With the return of junior Justin Robbins to the lineup, the Huskies now have three veteran receivers for senior quarterback Cody Pickett.

Stanford fans will remember Robbins for his dramatic catch in the back of the Cardinal end-zone in a 2000 contest to cap a wild Husky comeback. As a freshman he was invaluable, pulling in 22 receptions, the third-most by a first-year player at Washington.

The return of Robbins will make it that much tougher to defend UW's outstanding receiving combination of Reggie Williams and Charles Frederick. Williams, despite missing the first half last week due to a violation of team rules, has caught 18 passes this year for 277 yards. Frederick has 13 catches for 157 yards.

The Husky running game has definitely given the UW offense another dimension. Last Saturday the Huskies ran for 231 yards, the most by a Husky team since the 2001 Rose Bowl.

With a redshirt freshman at quarterback, Stanford is also relying on the run to key its offense.

Last week the Cardinal had all of 56 passing yards in their victory at BYU. That was the lowest single-game total in Stanford history. Even those numbers were somewhat inflated because 31 yards came courtesy of wide receiver Luke Powell on a trick play.

Stanford started the season with fifth-year senior Keith Lewis at quarterback. A veteran of 12 career starts, Lewis played in only five games last season due to injuries. After falling behind San Jose State 10-0, the Cardinal coaches made the switch from Lewis to backup Trent Edwards. Edwards threw for 278 yards, completing 21 of 38 passes, to lead Stanford to victory in his collegiate debut.

With Edwards struggling (finishing with 10 of 23 passing for 25 yards) against a BYU defense that played multiple defensive backs, running back Kenneth Tolon provided the bulk of the Cardinal offense. He carried the ball 32 times for a career-high 141 yards and one score.

Edwards also helped the Cardinal ground gain with a pair of bootleg runs that setup one score and resulted in another.

After opening the season with 17 receptions for 187 yards and a pair of scores against San Jose State, Powell was held in check as a receiver by the Cougars. He managed only 15 yards on five catches. The multi-talented receiver still made an impact on the game with his pass play and a 68-yard punt return that set up a field goal. He finished the game with 109 yards on punt returns.

The Huskies own a 38-32 advantage with four ties in the series against the Cardinal. Since 1983 the teams have played 16 times and the Washington has won 15 times. In 12 of those victories, the Huskies have managed to score at least 30 points.

This year, it might be defense, rather than offense, that dictates the winner of the 75th matchup between the two schools.

Sonny's SCOOP & STATS

with Husky Great Sonny Sixkiller

Huskies vs. Cardinal History: Washington holds a 38-32-4 advantage in the series against Stanford, but have been the dominant team lately. After winning eight straight vs. Stanford from 1959 to 1966, the Huskies lost 10 in a row from 1967 to 1976. Since that 1976 loss, Washington has gone 19-2 against the Cardinal. One of those two losses was a big upset in 1982 when the No. 2 Huskies fell to the Cardinal, 43-31, in Palo Alto. The only other UW loss during that stretch came at Stanford in 1994, when the Cardinal upset 12th-ranked Washington, 46-28. The Huskies have not lost to the Cardinal at home since 1975, a 24-21 Stanford victory. That home win streak in the series has run to 10 games following a 42-28 UW victory at Husky Stadium in 2001, the two teams' most recent meeting. One or both of the two teams have been ranked in the AP Top 25 in each of the last 10 meetings and in 18 of the last 20. Washington and Stanford first played one another in 1893 in a game that marked the first major college opponent for UW. That game, played in West Seattle, resulted in a 40-0 Stanford victory. There wouldn't be another matchup between the two schools until 1920, when the Cardinal nipped Washington, 3-0, in the last UW home game played somewhere other than Husky Stadium. After a 0-0 tie in 1921, the Huskies' first victory in the series came in 1922, 12-8 at Palo Alto.

Pac-10 Double Dip: Keith Gilbertson is the first coach in Husky history to come to Washington after having been head man at another Pac-10 school. In fact, it's relatively rare for a coach to have served in that capacity at more than one Pac-10 institution. Recently, Bruce Snyder (California and Arizona State), Dennis Erickson (Washington State at Oregon State) and Larry Smith (Arizona and USC) have done it. Earlier examples include Tommy Prothro (Oregon State at UCLA) and Washington's own Leonard "Stub" Allison, who coached one season at the UW (1920) before eventually spending 10 seasons as Cal head coach (1935-44).

Experienced O-Line: Though only three of five starters return from last year's regular offensive line, there is nonetheless a large amount of experience on the line in 2003. Two players that started every game last year, Khalif Barnes and Todd Bachert, return, and Nick Newton started all but one game in 2003. Additionally, junior guard Dan Dicks started six of 13 games last season. Barnes has started 28 games, while Bachert boasts 27 starts and Newton has started 26. Collectively, this year's corps of O-linemen had a total of 81 college games entering this season. Additionally, there are currently 10 offensive linemen on the UW roster that have earned at least one letter and, as a group, they've earned a total of 18 letters.

Helena's HEAVY HITTER

C.J. Bowles

Greg Carothers' college football career began tragically, at a time when the Huskies' football world came to a stop. It was October of 2000, and players stood in shock and worry as starting safety Curtis Williams was taken off the Stanford Stadium field with a severe neck injury. When the game resumed, however, someone had to take Williams' spot in the lineup.

Enter Greg Carothers.

How did a true freshman from Helena, Mont., rise steadily on the depth chart throughout the fall, and subsequently start the last four games of the season for the eventual Rose Bowl champions?

The answer is talent and hard work.

However, that work may have been invested someplace else, were it not for a little help from Montana native Bobby Hauck. The Huskies' special teams and safeties coach, Hauck played a significant role in putting Carothers in a purple and gold jersey in 2000.

“Coach Hauck sold me on this place,” says Carothers, now a senior and co-captain. “Though all of the places I was considering had some kind of Montana relation.”

Hauck envisioned Carothers as a bruising safety, in the mold of the Huskies' then-starter, Williams. Upon taking over the starting role following Williams' injury, Carothers played like a man possessed, capping an outstanding debut season with a six-tackle performance against Purdue in the Rose Bowl. Carothers made one of the game's key plays, stripping Boilermakers' running back Montrell Lowe of the football and recovering the fumble.

Carothers was credited for his efforts at the end of the season by being named an honorable mention freshman All-American by Rivals.com, and a co-winner of the team's Travis Spring Award, given out to the most outstanding offensive and defensive Husky freshmen.

All this from a player who had nearly given up the game just four years earlier.

“My brother was a basketball player, so I got into basketball as a kid,” he says. “My freshman year I wanted to spend all of my time playing basketball, but for whatever reason I continued to play football. It turned out to be my deal.”

The team's third-leading tackler as a safety in 2002, Carothers was moved this season to outside linebacker to take advantage of his size and speed.

The experts would agree. Although Carothers starred in basketball and track at Helena Capital High School, it was on the gridiron where he most impressed the critics. Carothers was twice named to the all-state first team as a safety, and was the Class AA State Defensive MVP his senior season.

He was certainly worthy of donning a Husky jersey, but Seattle was a long way from home.

“I didn't really know what to expect,” he says. “I think I adjusted to it a lot faster than I gave myself credit for.”

Carothers remembers, with a smile, his first few practices at Husky Stadium.

“Everything was strapped up, everything was tight,” he says. “I was hitting people to the ground. I would get kicked out of drills all the time because I was so worried about people running past me. It turned out that coach Hauck likes that kind of stuff, so I think I earned a little spot with him.”

The fierce and aggressive play Carothers exhibited in summer workouts earned him the second-string spot at free safety going into his freshman season.

When the moment came for the Huskies to take the field for the first time in the 2000 season, Carothers could hardly contain his excitement.

"It was crazy," he recalls. "I promised myself I wouldn't look up until I got all the way out of the tunnel — I don't know why, that's just what I decided I wanted to do. So right at the base of the tunnel, I looked up and it was just people everywhere. It felt a long, long way from home. The amount of people sitting in the stands was more than I have in my home city!

"I came from a school where we got maybe 3,000 people in the stands, and I thought the roar they made was amazing," Carothers continues. "But when you make a big play here it's like, 'Wow!' Sometimes I get so caught up in the moment that I will forget plays that just happened. I'll make a play and be back in the huddle before I even know it. Even now, after I've been here playing for three years."

Carothers continued to impress during his sophomore and junior campaigns, finishing with 72 tackles in 2001 and 84 in 2002. Last season, he showed a penchant for slipping into the backfield, making at least a half a tackle for loss in 10 of the team's 13 games. Carothers has now started 28 games during his career at Washington, three more than any other UW player.

Carothers and offensive tackle Khalif Barnes were recently discussing who had the most pictures and longest bios in the team's 2003 media guide.

"So I circled that (28 starts) and told him that was the most important," Carothers says with a smile. "I have been fortunate to have had a lot of opportunities. I wasn't really that big of a recruit when I first came in, but I had a good understanding of the game, which I think gave me the opportunity to play earlier than everyone else."

Carothers' modesty is typical of his upbringing.

"I had perfect parents — a dad who's hard to please and a mom who thinks you can't do anything wrong," he says. "I always worked extra hard to impress my dad, but if I felt bad after the game, I had my mom to fall back on — she always thought I had done everything right."

Carothers' parents have attended every UW home game during his career, and, he estimates, roughly 60 percent of the team's games on the road.

This year, Carothers' parents will see their son take on some different roles. The first is a change in position — after three years at strong safety, the coaches have decided to move Carothers to outside linebacker.

"In high school I played receiver, running back, linebacker, safety," he says. "Most of the time when I was playing safety, I was standing where the linebackers were anyway, so I've been playing the position for awhile. At safety, you get such a run into people that you don't have to worry about technique — you just run and hit them. Now, though, I can't just hit them and expect them to get out of my way."

Last season, Carothers made at least half a tackle for loss in 10 of 13 games.

While some players might fight a position change, Carothers takes it all in stride.

"I just want to play," he says. "As long as I get to play, it doesn't matter where I am. I just want to continue to play and, hopefully, be successful."

His team-first attitude has much to do with Carothers' second new role in 2003, that of team captain. Along with fellow seniors Cody Pickett and Terry Johnson, Carothers was chosen by his teammates to lead them this season.

"I'm not the 'Hey, I'm the leader, everybody follow me,' kind of guy. I try to just lead by example," he says. "I do talk, but mostly I like to show what I can do by how I play."

Obviously, his fellow players have gotten the message. Husky fans, too, have been well aware of how Carothers can play, from his outstanding Rose Bowl performance in 2001 to his statistical excellence in each of the last two seasons.

"It's been really, really cool," Carothers says. "Now that I look back at it, it seems kind of all a blur right now, but if I stop for a second and think about every single game, I've had a great, great deal going for me here. I've had a lot of great games that I've been able to play in and a lot of great experiences.

"But whatever may come, I'll always be a Montana kid."

Academic ALL-STAR

11 UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON STUDENT-ATHLETES WILL BE CHOSEN THROUGHOUT THE YEAR FOR ATHLETIC ACHIEVEMENT, ACADEMIC EXCELLENCE, OUTSTANDING LEADERSHIP AND EXEMPLARY COMMUNITY SERVICE.

Academic All-Star

Joe Birklid

Class: Junior, Defender

Major: Pre-Major

GPA: 3.67

Accomplishments

- Earned second-team Pac-10 All-Academic honors in 2002
- Leads Husky defense that has allowed just five goals in the first five games of 2003, leading UW to a 4-0-1 record
- Started all 16 games on defense for the Huskies as a sophomore, and was a 10-game starter as a freshman in 2001
- Led club team, FC United, to a state club championship in 2001

"Joe is a very important player to our team. He's been primarily a defensive player, but this year we've asked him to move outside and do some different things. He's had a fantastic attitude, and is willing to give his best effort wherever we put him. He's the kind of player coaches love to have, one who puts the team before himself. He's a good student, a hard worker, and a great kid. We're delighted with what we've seen from Joe, and think he's going to have a very good season for us this year."

Keith Gilbertson

A well-respected coach in the Pacific Northwest for more than 20 years, Keith Gilbertson was named the head football coach at Washington on July 29. The Husky job is Gilbertson's third stint as a head college coach.

The 2003 season will be the ninth year of coaching at Washington for Gilbertson. He is currently in his third term of service with the Husky program. He was a graduate assistant coach in 1975, an assistant coach from 1989-91 and again from 1999-2002.

Gilbertson becomes the 24th coach in the program's history. At age 55, he is the oldest individual to be named Washington's head coach. Gilbertson replaces Rick Neuheisel, who was terminated on June 12 after guiding the Huskies to a 33-16 record over the past four seasons.

Gilbertson's previous head coaching experience includes stints at Idaho (1986-88) and California (1992-95). He has a combined record of 48-35 at those two schools over seven seasons.

Gilbertson has been the Huskies' offensive coordinator the last three seasons. He was also a graduate assistant coach at the UW in 1976, as offensive line coach in 1998-90 and as the offensive coordinator in the national championship season of 1991. In 1999, he returned to Washington as assistant head coach and tight ends coach before being named offensive coordinator prior to the 2000 season.

In his two terms as the UW's offensive coordinator, Gilbertson built a reputation for varied and potent offenses. Gilbertson was instrumental in developing Washington's offense into one of the most explosive in the nation between 1989 and 1991. He was the Huskies' offensive line coach his first two seasons and took over as the offensive coordinator in 1991 when Washington won the national championship. The 1991 Washington team led the Pac-10 in total offense, rushing offense and scoring offense, relying on a balanced attack

In 2002, that offense was the most potent passing attack ever seen not only at Washington, but in the Pac-10. Junior quarterback Cody Pickett smashed the Pac-10 record for single-season passing yardage and completions while the UW threw for 4,501 yards as a team, breaking the old Pac-10 record by 712 yards.

In 2001, with a sophomore Pickett taking over the signalcalling, the Husky offense was second in the Pac-10 in passing, averaging 279.5 yards per game. A year earlier, behind senior quarterback Marques Tuiasosopo, UW's option-oriented rushing attack led the Pac-10 and was 16th nationally. The Huskies' ability to come from behind in the fourth quarter helped UW to the Pac-10 title and the 2001 Rose Bowl Championship.

Gilbertson began his coaching career as a graduate assistant at Idaho State (1971-74) and earned a degree in education from Western Washington, where he was a grad assistant in 1975.

After serving the 1976 season as a grad assistant at Washington for Don James, he was the offensive coordinator at Utah State from 1977 to 1981. In 1982 he joined Dennis Erickson's staff at Idaho for one season as the offensive coordinator. The Vandals recorded an 8-

Gilbertson's offense has turned quarterback Cody Pickett into one of the nation's top passers.

3 regular-season record and advanced to the quarterfinals of the NCAA I-AA playoffs.

For three seasons, from 1983-85, he coached in the USFL for the Los Angeles Express. He returned to Idaho in 1985 as the offensive coordinator and helped the Vandals to a 9-2 regular-season record and another trip to the NCAA playoffs. The following season he took over as Idaho's head coach when Erickson was named head coach at Washington State.

Gilbertson led the Vandals to an 11-2 record in 1988, the best mark in school history. That year Idaho advanced to the NCAA Division I-AA semifinals and he was named the Big Sky Conference coach of the year. His 1987 and 1988 teams both won the Big Sky championships. His .757 career winning percentage is still the highest in Idaho history.

His three Vandal teams produced a combined record of 28-9 and advanced to the I-AA playoffs all three seasons. When he left Idaho his winning percentage (.757) ranked as the second best mark in the history of the Big Sky Conference. His winning percentage of .826 in conference games (19-4) was the best in league history.

After working on James' staff at Washington from 1989-91, Gilbertson left the Huskies following the team's 1991 national championship season to take over as the head coach at California. His four-year stint as the Golden Bears' coach was highlighted by the 1993 team that posted a 9-4 record and defeated Iowa 37-3 in the Alamo Bowl. That win stands as California's last bowl victory. Gilbertson was also the last Cal coach to pin a loss on arch rival Stanford until 2002.

Following his head coaching tenure at California, Gilbertson worked as an assistant coach for the Seattle Seahawks on Erickson's staff for three seasons. In 1996 he served as a defensive specialist and took over as the tight ends coach for the 1997 and 1998 seasons.

Gilbertson grew up in Snohomish, Wash., where his father, Keith, Sr., has been a long-time prep coach. He attended Snohomish High School before going on to play football at Central Washington in 1967, Columbia Basin Junior College in 1968, and Hawaii from 1969-70.

He later returned to earn his bachelor's degree in social sciences from Central Washington in 1971. Gilbertson earned a degree in education from Western Washington in 1974.

Gilbertson was born in Snohomish on May 15, 1948, he attended Snohomish High School. He and his wife, Barbara, were married in 1988 and have two children, Kristin and David. Gilbertson also has an adult daughter, Ann, who resides in Los Angeles.

Gilbertson has been flexible as a coordinator, installing an option offense in 1999 to feature the talents of quarterback Marques Tuiasosopo.

Dr. Lee L. Huntsman was appointed interim president of the UW on Nov. 4, 2002.

Huntsman has served as UW provost and vice president for academic affairs since March 1997. As the University's chief academic and budgetary officer, he has provided leadership in educational and curriculum development, formulation and allocation of capital and operating budgets, academic and administrative personnel matters, allocation of space, long-range strategic planning, and management of the University's research programs. The provost serves as deputy to the UW president and provides advice and assistance to the president, the deans and the faculty in these matters.

Huntsman, who joined the UW faculty in 1968, holds the faculty appointment of professor of bioengineering. He served as director of the Center for Bioengineering (now Department of Bioengineering) from 1980 to 1996. He also served as associate dean for scientific affairs in the School of Medicine from 1993 to 1996, when he became acting provost. His laboratory's research, which received continuous funding from the National Institutes of Health, applied principles of engineering to biology and medicine in the measurement and regulation of the cardiovascular system.

He received a bachelor of science degree in electrical engineering from Stanford University in 1963 and a Ph.D. in biomedical engineering from the University of Pennsylvania in 1968. Huntsman is a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the American Institute of Medical and Biological Engineering.

DIRECTOR OF ATHLETICS BARBARA HEDGES

When it comes to recognition, Washington athletic director Barbara Hedges would prefer that the spotlight fall on Husky student-athletes. Still, it is hard not to acknowledge her accomplishments.

During the past decade, Washington's athletic teams have enjoyed unprecedented success. The Husky program is also recognized as a leader in gender equity, community service and outreach programs and Student-Athlete Support Services.

In 1999-2000 Hedges was named the NACDA/Continental Airlines Athletic Director of the Year for the NCAA Division I West Region. She was presented the Honda Award of Merit and the Seattle/King County Sports and Events Council named her their MVP of the Year Award Winner.

There is a chalkboard in Hedges' office filled with inspirational messages, quotations and philosophies provided by her staff and visitors. One of her passages reads, "Hope is not a strategy." It is very appropriate. The successes for Washington's athletic programs during Hedges' tenure that have earned her so many acknowledgements have been forged in hard work, planning and a commitment to excellence, not just wishful thinking.

Washington is currently in the second phase of its highly-successful "Campaign for the Student-Athlete" that has helped to generate several major capital improvements on the Montlake Campus. In November of 2000 the newly renovated Bank of America Arena at Hec Edmundson Pavilion opened to rave reviews. In addition to providing an elite competition venue for Washington's basketball, volleyball and gymnastics teams, as well as lockerrooms, training rooms, equipment rooms and new meeting rooms, the project also provided a home for the new $1 million Husky Hall of Fame that opened in the fall of 2002.

During September of 2001 Washington opened the $29 million Dempsey Indoor multi-purpose practice facility. With over 100,000 square feet of competition space, Washington's student-athletes have the nation's finest multi-purpose practice setting for year-round training purposes.

In 2000, Hedges' relationship with the NFL's Seattle Seahawks resulted in a $1 million gift towards the installation of a FieldTurf playing surface in Husky Stadium. Washington became just the second major college football program in the nation to play on the surface that has won rave reviews from players on both the collegiate and professional levels, and was later installed on a practice field adjacent to the stadium.

Still to come are stadium projects for the new soccer and baseball fields and a $20 million renovation of the Conibear Shellhouse, which also serves as the home for the Total Student-Athlete program.

It seems that Hedges' workload is never ending, but that is a reflection of her commitment to making the Washington program one of the best in the nation. The results have been proven on the field of competition.

In just her first year on the job, in 1991, the Husky football team posted a perfect 12-0 season by defeating Michigan in the Rose Bowl and winning the national championship.

The Husky women's rowing team has won three NCAA team titles, while the UW softball team has reached the College World Series seven of the last 10 years.

Under Hedges' direction the Husky golf, baseball and tennis programs have emerged on the national scene. Men's soccer, women's rowing and softball have all been ranked No. 1 in the nation during the past few years.

Hedges' efforts in gender equity have made Washington one of the national leaders in providing equal opportunities for both male and female student-athletes. In December of 1997, The Chronicle of Higher Education cited Washington as "the only Division I-A institution with an undergraduate enrollment that was at least 50 percent female to have achieved substantial proportionality in both scholarships and participation."

Hedges is similarly committed to a high level of academic achievement among Washington's student-athlete population. To this end, she has instituted a number of progressive measures — such as the Total Student-Athlete program devoted to leadership training, mentor programs and career nights — that she hopes will aid the student-athletes in more easily achieving all their non-athletic goals. The University's "UWired" program is unique in the nation, allowing student-athletes access to laptop computers to stay in touch with their classes while on the road.

Prior to her arrival at Washington in 1991, Hedges spent 17 years as an associate athletic director at the University of Southern California, where she was promoted to Senior Associate Director of Athletics in 1989.

Hedges' commitment to college athletics makes her a familiar name on the national scene. Hedges has served as president of the Council of Collegiate Women Athletic Administrators and the Western Collegiate Athletic Association and also as president of the Division I-A Women's Athletic Administrators. She chaired the NCAA Women's Tennis Committee for eight years and the NCAA Division I Men's and Women's Tennis Committee in 1988. She was one of a three-member NCAA Special Television Committee to negotiate the NCAA rights for all sports except football and basketball with ESPN, ABC, CBS and international television.

In 1996-97 she was the first woman to serve as president of the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics and in 1998 she was named the first woman to the Board of Directors for the National Football Foundation. She is also on the Board of Directors of the Division I-A Athletic Directors' Association, and has served previously with the Blue Ribbon Task Force for College Football USA, and the NCAA Working Group to study basketball issues. She is currently the chair of the Pac-10 Men's Basketball Officiating Committee, the Pac-10 Legislative Committee, and serves on the Pac-10 Athletic Directors' Television Committee. She is a member of the NCAA Championships and Competition Cabinet and serves on the regional selection committee for the College Football Hall of Fame.

She has also served as tournament director for the 1995 NCAA Men's Final Four, the 1993 NCAA Men's Basketball West Regional and the 1984 West Regional Women's Basketball Championship. Hedges was instrumental in bringing the 1992 Division I Women's Final Four to Los Angeles. At USC, she was administratively responsible for the 1988 NCAA Division I Men's Golf Championship and the 1990 Division I Men's Tennis Championship.

Before going to USC in 1973, Hedges coached gymnastics and taught physical education at the University of Arizona. During her five years with the Wildcats, Hedges coached her team to three conference championships and assisted in integrating women's athletic programs into the University's athletic structure. Prior to arriving at Arizona, Hedges coached gymnastics and taught physical education at high schools in Wyoming and Colorado.

Hedges received her bachelor's degree in physical education from Arizona State University in 1963, where she was honored as the University's outstanding physical education major while also being named to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities. She received her master's from the University of Arizona in 1971.

Hedges was born August 23, 1937, in Glendale, Arizona. She and her husband, John, have two grown children, Mark and Gregg.

Leaving the PAIN Behind

by Jordan Roy-Byrne

After fighting injury and immense pain for two years, most athletes would hang up their hat, content with their prior accomplishments. Such a road never seemed an option to John Russell.

When he arrived at Washington in 1999, Russell seemed destined for stardom. The 1999 Washington Class 1A state champion at 1,500 meters, Russell placed fourth in the same event at the 2000 Pac-10 Championships, and kicked off his sophomore cross-country campaign with a win at the Emerald City Invitational.

It became nearly impossible for fans of Husky track and field not to wonder if Russell would be the next great distance runner in a long tradition at Washington.

They would not wonder so again for nearly two years.

Following the 2000 cross-country season, Russell developed a common injury known as IT band syndrome, in which the fibula and the tendons on the outside of knee rub against each other, causing pain in the knee. The injury frequently results from running too much or too quickly, and generally affects runners and cyclists.

"I held off on surgery for a long time," says Russell. "I thought that if these problems were so sudden, despite all of my running, that I could recover without having surgery."

Russell and the trainers tried cortisone shots, deep tissue massage and even intentionally bruising the knee in order to encourage blood flow so that the knee would heal itself. Russell even spent a month with his leg immobilized in a cast to see if the pain would subside.

"It was really an arduous process," says seventh-year cross-country coach Greg Metcalf.

Finally, when every step was an exercise in pain, Russell opted for surgery.

Even after the surgery in January of 2002, Russell could still feel some pain in his knee, and wondered if the long road to recovery was even worthwhile.

"I was fairly discouraged about not being able to train initially after the surgery," Russell recalls. "One night, one of my teammates, Jason Fayant, told me, 'John, you have more talent than a lot of people I know. You will be able to run farther and faster if you keep going.'"

That was a huge pick-me-up because I respected Jason a lot. That's the sort of inspiration you expect to come from a coach, and it's great to hear that from a teammate and friend."

With nine months remaining until the fall cross-country season, and more than a year until the next track season, John hurled himself into his rehab.

Mostly healthy, Russell returned to competition during the 2002 cross-country season — his first race in nearly two years. Now a junior, Russell found himself in an unfamiliar position, running in the middle of the pack as he continued to build up strength in his knee.

Cross-country season was soon followed by indoor track, and with each race, Russell could feel the old speed coming back. Husky fans noticed as well, and the buzz began again that John Russell was back. At Fully healthy for the first time in nearly three years, Russell envisions himself in the finals of the 1,500 meters at the NCAA Championships.

April's Oregon Invitational, Russell finally broke back into the upper echelon of Pac-10 runners, clocking a career-best time of 3 minutes, 44.65 seconds in the 1,500 meters to qualify for Pac-10 and NCAA Regional competition.

Russell, however, wouldn't be happy merely qualifying. A fifth-place finish would be needed at the Regional in order to qualify Russell for his first-ever NCAA Championships. The junior placed sixth at the Pac-10 meet, and was seeded eighth in the Regional.

As the race began, Russell found himself boxed inside by a trio of Stanford runners, including Pac-10 champion Grant Robison. At the 1,100-meter mark, Husky teammate Eric Garner sprinted past on the outside and Russell went swith his teammate, passing fourth-place runner Jon Rankin of UCLA in the home stretch to take fifth, and with it an automatic berth to the NCAA Championships.

"Most guys in John's situation would have just quit running altogether," says Metcalf. "His success is a tribute to the young man he is. He loves running and the competition."

His comeback complete, Russell can now focus on reaching new heights, including leading Washington's men's cross-country team to the NCAA Championships and placing well at the NCAA track meet.

"Our school record in the 1,500 meters is 3:39, and John is only five seconds off at this point," says Metcalf. "I know he has trained hard over the summer and is excited about his opportunity this coming year."

Russell continues to train hard, focusing on the future, leaving the pain behind with each and every step.

“Most guys in John’s situation would have just quit running altogether. His success is a tribute to the young man he is. He loves running and the competition.”

— Head Coach Greg Metcalf

HUSKY LEGENDS

TOUSSAINT TYLER

A four-year letterwinner from 1977-80, Toussaint Tyler pushed the fullback position beyond the conventional limits of blocking and misdirection, and established himself as one of the greatest rushers in Husky football history.

While backfield-mate Joe Steele grabbed much of the attention from opposing defenses, Tyler racked up 1,898 yards rushing over four seasons, at the time the fourth-highest career total ever at UW. His career rush average of 4.9 yards per carry still ranks seventh in Husky history.

Tyler took full advantage of Steele's graduation in 1980, splitting time at tailback and fullback while rushing for 670 yards and 10 touchdowns, including a pair of three-score games, against Air Force and Northwestern.

Tyler's outstanding 1980 season earned honorable-mention All-America honors from the AP and UPI, as well as second-team All-Pac-10 accolades.

A 9th-round pick of the New Orleans Saints in the 1980 NFL Draft, Tyler played two seasons in the NFL before retiring in 1982.

From Humble Beginnings to a World-Class University

On October 1, 1891, the 465 new students who were on hand for opening day ceremonies at Leland Stanford Junior University greeted Leland and Jane Stanford enthusiastically, with a chant they had made up and rehearsed only that morning. “Wah-hoo! Wah-hoo! L-S-J-U! Stanford!” Its wild and spirited tone symbolized the excitement of this bold adventure. As a pioneer faculty member recalled, “Hope was in every heart, and the presiding spirit of freedom prompted us to dare greatly.”

For the Stanfords on that day, the University was the realization of a dream and a fitting tribute to the memory of their only son, who had died of typhoid fever weeks before his sixteenth birthday. Far from the nation’s center of culture and unencumbered by tradition or ivy, the new university drew students from all over the country. Though there were many difficulties during the first months — housing was inadequate, microscopes and books were late in arriving from the East — the first year foretold greatness. As Jane Stanford wrote in the summer of 1892, “Even our fondest hopes have been realized.”

More than one hundred years later, the university still enjoys the original 8,180 acres (almost 13 square miles) of grassy fields, eucalyptus groves, and rolling hills that were the Stanfords’ generous legacy, as well as the Quadrangle of “long corridors with their stately pillars” at the center of campus. It is still true, as the philosopher William James said, during his stint as a visiting professor, that the climate is “so friendly ... that every morning wakes one fresh for new amounts of work.”

In other ways, the university has changed tremendously on its way to recognition as one of the world’s great universities. At the hub of a vital and diverse Bay Area, Stanford is an hour’s drive south of San Francisco and just a few miles north of the Silicon Valley, an area dotted with computer and high technology firms largely spawned by the university’s faculty and graduates. On campus, students and faculty enjoy new libraries, modern laboratories, sports facilities, and comfortable residences.

Contemporary sculpture, as well as pieces from the Stanford Museum’s extensive collection of sculpture by Auguste Rodin, is placed throughout the campus, providing unexpected pleasures at many turns. At the Stanford Medical Center, world-renowned for its research, teaching, and patient care, scientists and physicians are searching for answers to fundamental questions about health and disease. Ninety miles down the coast, at Stanford’s Hopkins Marine Station on the Monterey Bay, scientists are working to better understand the mechanisms of evolution, human development, and ecological systems.

The university is organized into seven schools: Earth Sciences, Education, Engineering, the Graduate School of Business, Humanities and Sciences, Law and Medicine. In addition, there are more than 30 interdisciplinary centers, programs, and research laboratories. Stanford’s Overseas Studies Program offers students in all fields remarkable opportunities for study abroad, with campuses in Paris, Kyoto, Santiago, Berlin, Oxford, Florence, and Moscow.

By any measure, Stanford’s faculty — which numbers approximately 1,700 — is one of the most distinguished in the nation. It includes 17 Nobel laureates, 4 Pulitzer Prize winners, 21

National Medal of Science winners, 124 members of the National Academy of Sciences, 219 members of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, 83 members of the National Academy of Engineering, and 24 members of the National Academy of Education.

Currently 13,900 students, of which 6,500 are undergraduates, live and study on campus. About 40 percent come from California, but all 50 states and approximately 100 countries are represented as well. Among undergraduates, 44 percent are African American, Asian American, Hispanic or Native American. Like the faculty, the Stanford student body is distinguished. Approximately 10 students apply to Stanford for every place in the freshman class.

In the athletic arena, Stanford students have enjoyed tremendous success as well. Stanford fields teams in 34 Division I varsity sports — equally divided between men’s and women’s teams. Of Stanford’s 95 national team titles, 43 have been captured since 1990, by far the most in the nation. Thirty-eight of Stanford’s athletes and coaches participated in the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona, 49 competed in Atlanta at the 1996 Games and 34 represented Stanford at the 2000 Games in Sydney — by far the most of any university in the nation. Intramural and club sports are also popular; over 1,000 students take part in the club sports program, while participation in the intramural program has reached 9,000, with many students active in more than one sport.

In her address to the Board of Trustees, in 1904, Jane Stanford said, “. . . Let us not be afraid to outgrow old thoughts and ways, and dare to think on new lines as to the future of the work under our care.” Her thoughts echo in the words of former Stanford President Gerhard Casper, who has said, “The true university must reinvent itself every day . . . At Stanford, these are days of such reconsideration and fresh support for our fundamental tasks — teaching, learning, and research.”

The HITS Keep On COMIN'

by Mason Kelley

"Hitting Santana Moss was great," says Husky linebacker Tyler Krambrink. "I don't really know how to describe it. When I popped up after recovering the fumble, it was unreal; I have never seen anything like it. The stadium just exploded."

Husky fans no doubt know exactly the moment to which Krambrink refers. Battling sixth-ranked Miami at home in 2000, Washington was a decided underdog. Krambrink's first-quarter hit on future NFL star Moss, however, set the tone for a 34-29 Husky victory, sparking the team's run to the 2001 Rose Bowl title.

Tyler Krambrink

Krambrink forced another fumble, by Miami quarterback Ken Dorsey, in the second quarter, cementing a reputation as one of team's hardest hitters. Krambrink's only problem is that you have to be healthy to inflict hits. The Eatonville, Wash., native has battled the injury bug since his junior year at Eatonville High School. Despite suffering from a bout of mono that season, Krambrink scored 11 touchdowns as a tailback on offense, and seemed primed for a big senior year before a broken leg kept him out of all but three games. That was plenty of time to show college recruiters that he could contribute, however, as Krambrink rolled up eight touchdowns and 41 tackles.

"I was pretty nervous the first time I came out of the tunnel. My heart was just pounding. I wasn't even playing, but just being there was awesome."

He redshirted his freshman year at Washington before his breakout season in 2000, in which he racked up 24 tackles in 11 games. The injury gods, however, decided that two healthy years was enough for Krambrink, sending torn ligaments in his right wrist to keep him out of all but two games in 2001. A mostly healthy 2002 season followed, and Krambrink is determined not to let anything slow him down this season.

"I have been trying to get over that forever," he says. "It has been really frustrating, because I don't feel I have been able to play to the level that I'd like to. It seems like every time I get rolling again there is another setback. You always have adversity in life and there is not a whole lot you can do about it. You just have to take it head-on and deal with it."

With his hand almost completely healed, Krambrink will be able to get back on the field, helping the Huskies compete for the Pac-10 title. An outside linebacker this year after four years inside, Krambrink splits playing time with senior Greg Carothers.

"I would say that I am a little faster," Krambrink says when comparing his strengths to those of Carothers. "He has more mass and is probably better against the run than I am. My speed can help me in pass coverage, though, getting into the zone a little quicker."

As a kid, Krambrink applied his speed on the basketball court, not the football field.

"I lived in Wisconsin and I always played basketball," he says. "Basketball was really big at our school. There wasn't much to do in the fall, so I decided to go out for football. I started playing in seventh grade. I was a good athlete so I figured I would give it a shot."

It wasn't until he moved the mountain town of Eatonville that his love of football developed. At Eatonville, Friday night football brings out the whole town, which packs the stadium to see its Cruisers take the field.

"Football became my sport in eighth grade when I moved to Eatonville," he says. "Football is really big and there is a lot of tradition there. I had a good year in eighth grade and it continued every year after that. I really hadn't thought too much about playing in college until my junior year in high school."

Krambrink quit basketball after he failed to make the varsity team as a freshman, thinking he had more of a future in football.

"It just didn't interest me anymore," he says of his decision to quit basketball. "I didn't make the varsity team my freshman year and I decided, 'Maybe this isn't the sport for me anymore.' It might have been too lofty a goal, but it allowed me to focus my attention elsewhere."

His decision to come to Washington was equally simple.

"I really liked the coaching staff and liked the idea of being in Seattle, not too far from home," he says.

Krambrink's parents, John and Janet, make the drive from Eatonville to come to all of his games, as does his brother, Forrest.

"They come to every game," Krambrink says of his family. "They are always there to support me even if I'm injured or if I've had a bad game. They are always there encouraging me and keeping me going."

On game days, the Krambrinks are just three of 70,000 screaming people packing the stands at Husky Stadium, which, combined with the tremendous views of Lake Washington and Mt. Rainier, still leaves Krambrink in awe.

"I was pretty nervous the first time I came out of the tunnel," he says. "My heart was just pounding. I wasn't even playing, but just being there was awesome."

Krambrink would love to have a tremendous season, but above all else he wants his team to be successful.

"Winning a national championship would be great," Krambrink says, "but I would be happy with a Rose Bowl, too."

His health intact, Krambrink can run out of the tunnel on Saturday knowing that he lays it all out on the field, holding nothing back.

Just ask Santana Moss.

Krambrink ranked among the conference leaders in 2000 with three forced fumbles and three fumble recoveries.

A Proud Tradition of Academic Excellence

Founded in 1861, the University of Washington is one of the foremost institutions of higher education in the nation, richly combining its research, instructional and public service missions.

Its internationally acclaimed faculty includes five Nobel Laureates and the winner of the 1990 National Book Award for Fiction. Washington is part of an elite group of research universities whose contributions to American life are unique because they generate the basic knowledge upon which practical innovations are based.

The UW student body on the Seattle campus totals about 37,000, with an undergraduate enrollment of approximately 26,800. The UW also has campuses in Bothell and Tacoma, designed primarily for upper division (junior and senior) undergraduates and master's level graduate programs. Total enrollment at these campuses is about 3,600.

For more than 30 years, the university has been among the country's top five institutions in the dollar value of federal research grants and contracts awarded to its faculty. In 2000, the most recent year for which that data has been collected, the UW ranked second. Total grant and contract activity for 2001 exceeded $700 million. More than 80 percent of the university's grant and contract funds come from federal agencies. Research contributes directly to the educational goals of graduate and professional students, as well as to those of undergraduates.

Instruction and research at Washington are supported by a library system that is one of the most extensive in the nation, consisting of five major units and 18 branches, as well as libraries at UW Tacoma and UW Bothell, together housing more than five million volumes. In addition to offering instruction in more than 100 academic disciplines, the university offers a spectrum of continuing education courses that advance technical and professional skills and provide opportunities for personal growth and enrichment.

Washington has 17 major schools and colleges: Architecture and Urban Planning, Arts and Sciences, Business Administration, Dentistry, Education, Engineering, Forest Resources, The Graduate School, The Information School, Law, Medicine, Nursing, Ocean and Fishery Sciences, Pharmacy, Public Affairs, Public Health and Community Medicine, and Social Work.

About 90 percent of the University's undergraduate students are state residents, although instructional programs draw students from every region of the country and overseas.

Most freshmen entering Washington are in the top third of their high school graduating classes. In 2001, the average incoming freshman boasted a 3.63 high school grade point average and an 1,159 SAT score.

Beyond its academic and service missions, the UW has a strong economic impact on Washington and the Pacific Northwest.

With about 20,000 employees, Washington is the second-largest employer in King County. Washington operates the University of Washington Medical Center and Harborview Medical Center, which annually provide more than 200,000 days of patient care and record more than 300,000 visits to their outpatient clinics.

Washington also plays a critical role in attracting new business to the region. It provides these, and established businesses, with a steady stream of well-educated graduates and with highly skilled faculty members who assist business and industry in a variety of ways.

The University of Washington in Seattle is located on 703 acres in the city's northeast residential area, a beautiful setting on the shore of Lake Washington and Portage Bay. The majestic Cascade Mountains can be seen to the east and the Olympics loom to the west, while the western view includes downtown Seattle and Lake Union. The combination of this spectacular setting with buildings in both neo-Gothic and modern styles gives the campus a distinctive aura.

Ethical Conduct and Your Responsibility

By Merlene Aitken

Any individual involved in intercollegiate athletics — whether as a player, a coach or an administrator — has the responsibility to represent the University of Washington with the utmost dignity and honor.

When participating in athletics at this level, everyone involved must remember to act with honesty and sportsmanship at all times before, during and after any competition. It is important to remember that no matter what a person's involvement in intercollegiate athletics, they represent the University of Washington and the integrity of the sport being played.

Unethical conduct is strictly outlined in NCAA Bylaw 10.1, and carries a stiff penalty if these regulations are violated. Unethical conduct by a prospective or enrolled student-athlete, a coach, or an administrator includes the failure to cooperate with an investigation of a possible violation of any NCAA and/or Pac-10 regulations. A violation also will occur if anyone is involved in the production of fraudulent records, such as academic transcripts, for a prospective or enrolled student-athlete

No person is allowed to provide a prospective or enrolled student-athlete with any extra benefits including, but not limited to, improper financial aid. Unethical conduct also includes providing the institution with false or misleading information concerning an individual who may be involved in a possible NCAA violation. Administrators could face severe penalties if it is found they received benefits to facilitate or arrange a meeting between a student-athlete and an agent, anyone employed by an agent, or a financial advisor.

Institutional staff members have the responsibility to report any knowledge of a student-athlete's use of any banned substances or any possible gambling activities. Student-athletes involved in any violation of these regulations will no longer be allowed to participate in intercollegiate athletics. Any administrator involved in these violations will be subject to investigation and disciplinary actions.

In order to maintain institutional control, the University of Washington intercollegiate athletics program must be in compliance with the rules and regulations set forth by the NCAA.

So, who is responsible for overseeing that the athletics program follows these rules?

The answer is not just the athletic department, but also the staff members and any other individual or organization engaged in activities promoting the athletics interests of the institution.

Not only are all departments responsible for enforcing the rules set by the NCAA, but it is also their responsibility to follow them.

Violations can occur from a prospective or enrolled student-athlete, or a current or former institutional staff member. The institutional staff member could be a coach, professor, tutor, teaching assistant, dean, or advisor.

It is not just the athletes and the athletic department's responsibility to represent the institution, but the institution as a whole.

DIGGIN' DEFENSE

by Mike Bruscas

Success in volleyball starts from the ground up.

The sets and spikes might receive the most attention, but the foundation of a good offense comes from its digs and passes.

"Passing is the most important part of the game," says Husky senior Libba Lawrence. "Most people don't realize it because they only see the kills. Passing is really difficult. We have to be focused the entire time because if you don't make a pass, you don't score. It sets up everything else."

A native of West Linn, Ore., Libba Lawrence plays — naturally — the "libero" position. Her name and position has a flow to it matched only by her defense.

Lawrence saw action in 31 matches last season, racking up 133 digs and 21 assists, the latter ranking third on the team. The Huskies will need that same level of production if they hope to make a return trip to the NAAs. After reversing a streak of four straight losing seasons to reach the second round of the NCAA Tournament last year, the Huskies have earned a measure of respect.

"We're starting to scare people now," Lawrence says with pride.

In the third season under head coach Jim McLaughlin, the Huskies must now prove that their success was the result of a system that can be replicated year after year. The team has set its sights even higher in 2003, despite losing first team All-American outside hitter Paige Benjamin and first team All-Pac-10 setter Gretchen Maurer.

"Even though we lost great players like Paige and Gretch, we have a lot of returners and we had a good recruiting class," Lawrence points out. "Our coaches set the expectations higher this year since we made the tournament, which is good because we have the potential to meet them."

Early indications are that Lawrence is correct. Washington's record stood at 11-0 as of Sept. 22, the best start in school history. The Huskies know, though, that dominating non-conference foes won't count for much in the loaded Pac-10 Conference, which boasts defending national champion USC as well as NCAA runner-up Stanford. No matter, says Lawrence — to be considered among the best teams in the nation, you eventually have to go through the best. "We want to finish in the top three in the Pac-10 and of course make the NCAA Tournament again," she says. "I think we'll just take it from there. I for sure want to end on a high note."

Coming out of high school, Lawrence felt a strong family pull towards Stanford, where her sister Emily had won a national championship. However, Lawrence chose to oppose her sister rather than complement her on the Cardinal court.

"I can remember my freshman year when we played them for the first time and we were both in at the same time," she says. "I'd smile at her across the net. I think she got kind of mad."

As if the transition from high school to the collegiate level wasn't difficult enough, a coaching change following her freshman season forced Lawrence to learn a brand new system.

While the team saw significant improvement in its first year under Jim McLaughlin, the change was initially difficult for Lawrence, who saw her playing time decreased.

"It was tough, especially for me," she says. "It took me a while to get with the program. Now I realize that this system has made me a better player — really, I don't see how we even did it my freshman year without his system."

Although Lawrence's position sounds glamorous, a libero is all about defense. Lawrence rotates in on the back line for a front-court player and thus rarely, if ever, records kills, the "it" stat of volleyball.

"Because I am so short, I haven't hit the ball since I was 14 years old," Lawrence laughs. "A dig is better for me, because if you dig a hard-hit ball from (former Stanford star)

Logan Tom or someone, it feels 10 times better than spiking a ball."

The positive vibe surrounding the program, coupled with early-season success for the Dawgs, has instilled a cheerful optimism in Lawrence even under the weight of expectations and four hard years of sport and study. She is most grateful that she is still "able to come and be happy," which she knows isn't always the case.

"I know a lot of people who in their fourth year just can't wait for it to be done," she says. "I'm still excited for the season to start. I'm just lucky, I guess."

Libba Lawrence, lucky libero.

UW Project Exposes Disadvantaged Youth to Positive College Environment

Bethann Pflugeisen describes her college major, community studies, as being about “social change with a practical component.” Given that, it’s maybe not surprising that she recently received the “Person Who Makes a Difference Award” from the Yakima Valley GEAR UP project.

Pflugeisen, the outreach program manager for the UW GEAR UP project, has been trying to make a difference ever since she picked up her degree from the University of California at Santa Cruz and came to Seattle looking for a job.

“I knew I wanted to do something to help people,” she says. “I believe in college and I believe in young people. I also believe that opportunities aren’t necessarily made available equally. So GEAR UP was a good fit for me.”

GEAR UP is a national program designed to expose disadvantaged students in middle and high school to college life, in hopes that the experience will encourage them to pursue a college education when they’re older. There are 11 GEAR UP grants at various locations in Washington; the UW program exists to serve the others. Pflugeisen is one of the liaisons between campus and the other locations.

During the course of her work, Pflugeisen met Matthew Carlson, the GEAR UP site director for the small town of Zillah — part of the Yakima Valley project. Carlson nominated her for the award, which honors her “outstanding work in coordinating mentor-outreach activities.”

“Bethann does great work,” is how Carlson explains his reason for nominating her. “I can call her on three-days notice and tell her I’m going to have some kids on campus, and when we get there she’s got plans made and people to carry them out.”

A large part of the UW’s role in GEAR UP is to hold an institute every summer when 1,000 kids from the various projects come to campus in groups of 200 over five weeks. Pflugeisen participates in planning the institute, but she also plans visits that GEAR UP groups like Carlson’s make to the campus during the academic year. Additionally, she goes out to the sites as often as possible.

“I stay in close touch with the site directors and try to help them with whatever they want done,” she says of her role.

Carlson cites the time he called Pflugeisen to tell her he was planning an activity in a Yakima park for GEAR UP kids and their parents.

“I said it would be nice if the parents could meet the UW mentors the kids would be working with at the institute,” he says.

Pflugeisen showed up with “two truckloads” of mentors.

“They bonded with the parents and the kids and really built trust in the program,” Carlson says.

Hiring and supervising the mentors — UW students who come from similar backgrounds as the GEAR UP kids — is one of Pflugeisen’s responsibilities. Mentors work with GEAR UP kids during the institute and stay in touch during the academic year.

“I love working with the mentors,” she says. “I think they’re creative and fun and a really impressive group. And it’s important to me that they develop professionally themselves, which they can do on this job.”

Carlson believes Pflugeisen has succeeded in encouraging that development.

“I think it says something about her that the people who work for her always come prepared,” he says. “They have smiles on their faces and they do a good job.”

Pflugeisen began working for GEAR UP in 2001 after deliberately choosing Seattle as her home.

“My family came through here on our way to Canada when I was 10 years old,” she says. “I looked at Seattle and I said that this was where I was going to live when I grew up.”

Her family didn’t take her seriously, Pflugeisen says, but she followed through, staying with family friends until she landed a job in the GEAR UP office. She moved to her present position about six months later.

“I’ve so much enjoyed this work,” she says. “The kids are fun, and the mentors I have great respect for. The diversity in the program is unbelievable — even just in our office — and I really like watching the process the kids go through as they begin to see there are more options out there than they thought.”

For Carlson, that process is the bottom line.

“We have a lot of partners in this project,” he says. “We work with community colleges, clinics, service agencies and so on. But what matters is the individuals in those organizations and what they’re willing to do. When I make Bethann aware of opportunities to do things for the kids, she always comes through. That’s what counts. That’s what makes her a person who makes a difference.”

LIKE FATHER, LIKE DAUGHTER

by Mason Kelley

Playing soccer comes as naturally to Nicole Martinez as breathing. Her dad, a former player himself, taught Martinez the nuances of the game.

"He taught me and I have never stopped," Martinez said of her father, Will, who lives in California.

Martinez's parents have been instrumental in her life in ways far greater than instilling her love for a game she will play as long as she can. Martinez lived with her mother, Joanne Nutley, as a child, but remains close with her father.

"I remember my parents always coming to my rec league games," she says. "They would always bring the oranges at halftime and that would really pump me up, because I knew I had people watching me."

Nicole Martinez

Watching Martinez has been a priority for her parents, but has proven more difficult for her California-based father than her Redmond-based mother. Fortunately, the Huskies usually play several games a year in the Sunshine State, and Will is at every one.

"Having my dad there is awesome," says Martinez. "Last year he was pretty disappointed that we didn't go down there at all, but this year he will be at the games against the northern and southern California schools."

Martinez' father may indeed see more games this year than her mother, who will soon be moving to Singapore.

"I'm all alone now," Martinez says jokingly.

Fortunately, Martinez has drawn plenty of attention for her play on the field since arriving at Washington in 2001. Martinez was forced into action immediately when Pac-10 Defender of the Year Andrea Morelli suffered a season-ending injury in the preseason. It is a testament to Martinez' ability that not only did the Husky defense not wither without its best player, it actually improved statistically, surrendering just 12 goals, a school record.

The true freshman was honored after the season as the team's defensive MVP and Rookie of the Year.

"It was scary, but at the same time I think I was a little bit ignorant," Martinez says of her freshman campaign. "I didn't know about the big-time schools. I didn't care about the UCLA's

An outstanding prep player at Woodinville High School, Martinez was named Gatorade's State Player of the Year in 2000 and the USC's; it was just another team that we had to play."

While Martinez had another good season during her sophomore campaign, the Huskies fell just short of an NCAA tournament bid.

"The way we look at it, we shouldn't have even given the NCAA a chance to not let us in," Martinez says. "It is totally on ourselves. Now, it's up to us to change that outcome this year."

The Huskies are looking to get past last year and move back up to the top of the Pac-10. With Martinez leading the way, the defense should be as stingy as ever, even after losing star goalkeeper Hope Solo to the WUSA.

"This year we are really excited because we have all returning players on defense," says Martinez. "We are pretty much settled into what we are doing, and are just working on clicking and getting everyone on the same page."

Huskies' coach Leslie Gallimore recognizes Martinez's importance to the defense and wants her to take her game to the next level this year.

"Nicole needs to step up and be a big leader for us at the back this year," Gallimore says. "She needs make sure that she's not only taking care of what she needs to take care of, but to also lead a group of four or five players. I think that will be Nicole's biggest challenge and I certainly think she is capable of it."

When Martinez wraps up her career at Washington, she would like to continue playing professionally somewhere.

"I would like to play when I am done," Martinez says. "If not, I will probably end up coaching."

Maybe then Martinez can pass on the gift of a love for soccer that her father once gave to her.
